Care of Brushes

Brushes will last longer if thoroughly washed before use to remove any starch or dressing that might be present on the hairs.

Soon after each use, brushes should be washed first in the solvent of the paint used (i.e. water, white spirit), and then in a mild soapy solution. Warm water can be used, but never hot as this may dissolve the glue attaching the hairs. Vigorous cleaning will prolong brush life, not shorten it. Remove all paint residue from the hairs with particular care to clean at the ferrule - if paint builds in the ferrule, it will force the hairs out to a fan shape. When clean, shape the brush and leave flat to dry so that water doesn't seep into the ferrule.

We recommend a very simple soap for cleaning brushes - 'Marseilles Soap'. Many other detergents like washing-up liquid will leave the hairs brittle. (As the hairs on our heads would be!). Marseilles soap cleans exceptionally well and replenishes the hairs with oils to keep them flexible for a longer life.

Marseilles (or Olive Oil) soap is available in two forms. The block is used for working brushes onto the surface with water. It is also an excellent hand wash after contact with solvents, helping to moisturise the skin. The flaked Marseilles soap can be dissolved into hot water to make a gel for soaking brushes. It will suck paint from the ferrule and need only be rinsed thoroughly before leaving to dry. The gel can also be used to protect brushes for long-term storage.
